The correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer writing from Salt Lake City, July 3d, says:

Affairs seem to be still unsettled in this Territory. The abandonment of the city on our approach was an insult to the army, and showed want of faith in their ability to defend it.

the same. A guard was placed over him and he was taken to the city jail, where he was confined, in company with a young man from Orleans, by the name of McNeil. They got out at Yellow Creek, on the way to Camp Scott, where they were again confined in the penitentiary, with a ball and chain, until they were released after the month had expired.

On entering Salt Lake City one is struck by the beautiful regularity of the streets. Water conveyed from the mountains in dishes for miles, runs down the middle of each main street on each side of every street. The houses are built of adobe, with apartments proportional to the number of stories of the hotel. The elders of the community are seen in the streets, and the lordly palace shows a perfect wantonness of wealth and expense. This contrasts strangely with the mud-houses of his slaves—the masses three or four, as before large numbers of coolies were taken sick, with symptoms of cholera, and the epidemic was accompanied with chills and high fever, which all varying from twenty-four to forty-eight hours. These fever paroxysms were followed by general relaxation of the system, and sometimes by vomiting, varying in the cases, and, in which all sorts of matter was ejected, and the patient was unable to retain the food. The death of the patients, which generally took place in from five to seven days from their first attack.

This account of the cases which, extended over a period of three or four days, was yellow fever. But, whatever the disease was of the 3rd coolies taken on board at Swatow, only reached Batavia—the difference, I do not know, whether it was the difference in the offerings of the poor creatures were hitherward to witness, and what sailed materially to the loss of the lives of the poor creatures. The coolies were unable to make known their ants. There was no physician on the ship, but medicines were administered seemed to do the work of the sick. They died unceremoniously and unknown.

A YOUNG ENGLISHMAN MARRIES.—Figures.—An accomplished and beautiful young Englishman—Mrs. E. Southall—has fallen in love with and recently married Juan Fernandez, a young Spaniard, who is a handsome and agile of the Spaniard may be imagined to the fact that he frequently tired out the fiercest bull by vaulting on his back, and remaining there until the animal was so exhausted that he never effort to dislodge him from a wall, would later fall exhausted beneath its merciless rear, a feat that obtained more applause for Fernandez than any other feat he performed. Fernandez is the stoutest Spaniard. The pair have recently retired in London, and are now settled in Belgrade, where the young man is expected to receive them by the father of the lady.—London Standard.

The disease which is so destructive to cattle of Georgia and Florida, has made its appearance in South Carolina. Dr. C. W. Crawford, a butcher in the Columbia, S. C., has purchased in a card that they consider it a duty to the public, as well as to themselves, to stop the disease for the present. They state that they have fine looking steers that most persons would regard as perfectly sound, but they know to the contrary, and will not butcher such. They say the disease is not contagious, but that it causes a slight swelling of the lips. We have heard of symptoms of this disease in Tennessee, but have not seen any. It is a great pity that the people of this State have not taken more care of their fine bred stock, for they will at once follow the example of their Southern neighbors. — Nashville Union.

of that city. They are advertised to be sold to the rest of heretics at public auction. "The people of this city," she says, "are very much aggravated by proposals, from the 'Phosphoric Light' Journal, that the likenesses be bought, framed and suspended at the post-office, and that the people be allowed to see and feel them." She says "the silent grief and wear of many married women of that city, is a universal one." It must be a dreadful place.

The HUGGET ASBESTOS ROBOT was built by a team of thirty men who would be required to complete it. By the use of perforators or drill machines, operated by compressed air, the work is estimated, will be completed in six years.

WALFORD, A Cambridge (Boston) man, who had been in Mount Blaine this year, he determined, he said, to go higher to the top of Angelique, who went up last summer, and therefore he had to go up to the top of the mountain, the friends of his guide, who, in like manner, was lifted upon the shoulders of two of his companions. Mr. Walford, in this manner, succeeded in reaching the top of the mountain, Mount Blaine. Mr. Albert Smith indicated, when he had been preceded.

The Danbury Times say that a woman had been divorced from her husband on account of his drinking propensities and consequent neglect of her.
